About World Brewing Congress 2004

The world of brewing will come together July 25–28, 2004, when the World Brewing Congress convenes in San Diego, California. Current technological advances, new research results, the future of brewing, and different methods of brewing will be discussed on a global scale. Mark your calendar and plan to attend the World Brewing Congress 2004.

The world brewing congress is organized by the American Society of Brewing Chemists and the Master Brewers Association of the Americas in partnership with the Brewery Convention of Japan, the European Brewery Convention and the Institute and Guild of Brewing.

The technical program calls for a unique blend of new topics or future visions to existing topics of importance to brewing science and associated industries. Preliminary plans call for sessions centering around raw materials, wort production, yeast and fermentation including continuous beer production, finishing, packaging, biotechnology, flavor stability, and related issues such as HACCP and ISO, consumer testing and health. Contributions relating to all other aspects of brewing and associated industries are welcomed. Prospective papers that present new analytical or microbiological protocols will be considered.

Subject matter for both oral presentations and posters may be original research and development, describe advances or progress in brewing and/or packaging technology, or be of a technical review format that summarizes existing problems and proposes future solutions.

In order to ensure the highest technical quality for the Congress, the number of oral and poster presentations will be limited. Therefore, all oral and poster submissions will be reviewed by the WBC Technical Program Committee for acceptance into the program. THE SUBMISSION DEADLINE IS January 30, 2004.
